

A Personal Note from Single Steps Strategies Founder Mary Grace Musuneggi

Making History

March is “Women’s History Month” and a great time to remember the many women who have had an impact on our lives, our society, and our world. There are those famous and infamous. There are classical women and modern women. Some that always come to mind for me are Madame Curie, Helen Keller, Florence Nightingale, as these were the few women I was taught about in school in my early education. As I grew older I learned to admire Jacqueline Kennedy, Princess Diane, Mother Theresa, Eleanor Roosevelt; but didn’t we all. It wasn’t until the civil rights movement and the women’s movement that I learned about Rosa Parks, Susan B. Anthony and Betty Friedan. And there are so many women that impacted our world; whose names will never be household words.

More importantly, there are those women who have influenced our personal lives. For me those would be my mother, my Aunt Mary, Sr. Theresa Marie, friends, family, and business associates. My world is all it is due to the love of good friends and the “kindness of strangers.” There are so many women I admire because they have imparted their knowledge to me; or they have been excellent examples of successful businesswomen, amazing mothers, and/or community leaders.

But while these women have been influencing our world, what are we doing to influence others? We all have a responsibility to impact the world around us. And little do we know that by our mere presence here, we are influencing a small piece of it. You are an example to your children; and to your co-workers. Could you be a mentor to a student? Or can you volunteer to make a women’s group more viable? Can you share your knowledge and talents with others?

During March, be grateful for those women who have made history; but go out into the world and make history of your own.

Single Steps Strategies would like to be part of your life’s history. Join us for our upcoming workshops and events.

We look forward to meeting you on your life’s journey. And remember, all life’s journeys begin with a Single Step.
